1.0 INTRODUCTION

1.1 Authorization

The Dry Cleaners Initiative (DCI) was conducted by the Maryland Department of the Environment (MDE), Waste Management Administration, Land Restoration Program (LRP) under a Cooperative Agreement with the U. S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) using the authority of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 and the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986.

1.2 Scope of Work

MDE's Federal Superfund Division conducted the DCI to document historic and current dry cleaning operations and rank them for the need for potential further pre-remedial investigations. The objective of this investigation was to research historic telephone directories for each county in Maryland and record the name and address of former and current dry cleaning operations to gain a better understanding of the scope and extent of potential problems associated with the release of dry cleaning chemicals into the environment. A second step involved analyzing the list to determine a priority for potential future environmental investigations at select facilities.

The scope of the DCI involved compiling a list of the historical dry cleaners in Maryland through research of historic telephone directories for each county at the Enoch Pratt Central Library in Baltimore City. Development of the list of historic dry cleaners began with research of telephone directories from the 1948, 1955-1956 era. That era was chosen since every county in Maryland was represented in the Central Library's collection of telephone directories. LRP personnel next researched the era from 1969-1970 and 1976 due to the availability of telephone directories representing the broadest range of Maryland counties and larger locales. Modern era facilities were obtained from MDE's Air and Radiation Management Administration's (ARMA) list of permitted dry cleaning facilities in 2007. Facilities and their addresses were recorded under the telephone directory sections or headings identified as: "Cleaners," "Dry Cleaning Equipment Retailers," "Cleaners and Dyers," "Cleaners and Dyers Supplies," "Commercial and Industrial Cleaners," and "Carpet and Rug Cleaners." The facilities compiled over these three snapshots in time were then systematically evaluated and ranked in priority for future environmental investigations.

1.3 Executive Summary

In the early 1900s, dry cleaners began using spirits of turpentine, called "camphene," as a commercial dry cleaning solvent. In the 1920s, Germany introduced the first use of Stoddard solvent, a dry cleaning solvent mixture of petroleum distillate fractions of over 200 compounds that had a higher flash point than other solvents currently in use at that time. Shortly thereafter, chlorinated hydrocarbon based nonflammable synthetic solvents were introduced into the United States which allowed dry cleaners to safely clean fabrics, preserve the color of the garment and restore the garment to a nearly new condition. These chlorinated hydrocarbon solvents include carbon tetrachloride, trichloroethene (TCE), tetrachloroethene (PCE), 1,1,2-trichloro-1,2,2,- trifluoroethane (Freon 113 or Valcene, a chlorofluorocarbon subject to the Montreal Protocols and no longer manufactured in the United States) and by the early 1980s, 1,1,1-trichloroethane (TCA). The Halogenated Solvent Industry Alliance 1987 white paper on PCE estimates that dry cleaners have used 56 percent of all of the PCE used in the United States. These chlorinated hydrocarbons used as dry cleaning solvents, as well as some of their associated degradation products, are carcinogens that appear on EPA's Target Compound List (TCL) of regulated hazardous substances.

The release of these TCL contaminants from dry cleaning facilities into the environment, primarily to groundwater, is well known and documented. The main discharge point for dry cleaners is the sewer line. The discharge from most dry cleaning units contains primarily water with dissolved phase chlorinated hydrocarbons, but also contains some liquid phase and some colloids containing chlorinated hydrocarbons. Being heavier than water, the chlorinated hydrocarbons settle to the bottom of the sewer line and exfiltrate through joints and cracks in the lines. Many of these chlorinated hydrocarbons have low vapor pressures and are volatile with a portion turning into a gaseous phase and penetrating the sewer line walls through the vadose zone in the soils and into the groundwater, or the gaseous phase portion can rise through the shallow soils and intrude buildings creating risk to people exposed to the indoor air.

MDE's LRP was tasked to assess the State wide scope of the potential problem of releases of liquid and/or dissolved phase dry cleaning solvents and their degradation products into the groundwater or volatilizing to create indoor air issues. To effectively gain a prompt perspective of the extent of this potential problem, MDE compiled a list of dry cleaning operations over three eras that were determined by the availability of statewide data to research. MDE researched the earliest available telephone directories at the Enoch Pratt Central Library in Baltimore City during an era when each county was represented in a telephone directory. The earliest era with the greatest coverage of the State was the 1948 and 1955-1956 era. Later, as populations increased in the more urban areas of the State, the directories were further broken down into grouped municipalities within certain more populated counties. Those directories researched included the time period of the 1969-1970 and 1976 era. The names and addresses of dry cleaning facilities were compiled by recording the entries in the directories under the following headings; "Cleaners," "Dry Cleaning Equipment," "Cleaners and Dyers Plants," "Cleaners and Suppliers," "Commercial and Industrial Cleaners," and "Carpet and Rug Cleaners." Rug and carpet cleaners that advertised "wall to wall cleaning", "Von Shrader," "Duraclean," or "Servicemaster" methods were not listed as those methods utilized foam detergents rather than solvent-based cleaning agents. A list of current dry cleaning operations was obtained from MDE's ARMA permitted facilities database.

Facilities determined to have the highest potential to impact human health and the environment were assigned the highest priority for future investigation. These facilities were identified by analyzing the list to determine the potential full time dry cleaning operations (those facilities that included "plant," "on premises," "30 minute," "1 or one hour," "2 hour," "3 hour," "7 hour," or similar description in their name or advertisement) and have operated over extended periods of time in MDE designated Wellhead Protection Areas (WHPA). Succeeding tiers of facilities were ranked based on the relative age of operation and then whether the terms "plant," "on premises," "30 minute," "1 or one hour," "2 hour," "3 hour," "7 hour," or similar, were used in the facility's title or advertisement that would distinguish full time facilities from those that may serve as drop off/pick up locations. The lowest ranking facilities are those that may be drop off/pickup operations or laundries where solvent treatments for spots and stains on clothing may have occurred on site, but are not considered as full time dry cleaning operations. The determination of full time status of these operations was made based solely on the names of those facilities. Since there is obviously some error inherent in this process, it is expected that any number of the other facilities not classified as full time facilities in this report, were indeed full time operations, and vice versa.

It is also important to note that this investigation only reviewed those potential dry cleaning facilities that advertised in telephone directories for certain time periods and appear on MDE's ARMA list of permitted dry cleaning facilities. There are many facilities that have operated and closed during periods that were not reviewed during this investigation and therefore are not captured and listed in this report.

2.0 ENVIRONMENTAL SETTING

The pathways of concern for most dry cleaning facilities are groundwater and air pathways, and to a lesser degree, the surface water and soil pathways. The air pathway can be addressed further as potential threats to indoor air. Targets are physical or environmental receptors that are within the Target Distance Limit (TDL) for the pathway. The groundwater pathway and the air pathway are four mile radii around the "site." The air pathway however, may extend as far as an observed release can be established. The surface water pathway includes a TDL of 15 miles downstream from the facility. The soil pathway extends in a 200 foot radius from the facility. There are 5.3 million people residing in Maryland, at 542 people per square mile.

2.1 Geology and Groundwater

Maryland extends across three sharply defined physiographic regions known as the Coastal Plain, Piedmont Plateau and the Appalachian provinces which parallel the Atlantic shore in belts of varying width.

The Coastal plain province is underlain by a series of southeasterly dipping layers of relatively unconsolidated sand and clay with lesser amounts of gravel, superimposed upon the eastward continuation of the crystalline rocks of the Piedmont Plateau. The surface between the two types of rocks likewise dips to the southeast. The unconsolidated layers of sedimentary rocks are only a relatively thin veneer on the crystalline rocks.

The Piedmont province is marked by a broad undulating surface with low knobs and ridges rising above the general level and with numerous rather deep and narrow stream valleys incised into it. The Piedmont province is subdivided into the eastern and western divisions.

The eastern division is underlain by a complex series of metamorphosed rocks, including gneisses, slates, phyllites, schists, marble, serpentine, and granitic and gabbroic rocks. Because of the variety of rock types, their varied resistance to erosion, and the complications in their structural relationships, this division has a highly diversified topography. The streams have relatively steep gradients with rapids and small waterfalls common. None of the provinces streams are navigatable until the Coastal Plain province is reached.

The western division of the piedmont is underlain in its easterly portion by a series of metamorphic rocks similar to but less strongly metamorphosed than those of the eastern division. Its larger western portion is the valley of Frederick County which is predominantly underlain by Cambro-Ordovician limestones that are folded but not strongly recrystallized, and upon which, with pronounced unconformity, lie red Triassic sandstones, shales and siltstones of the Newark group. Most of the drainage in the province is to the Monocacy River. The tributaries flowing from east to west are longer and carry a larger volume of water than those from the west.

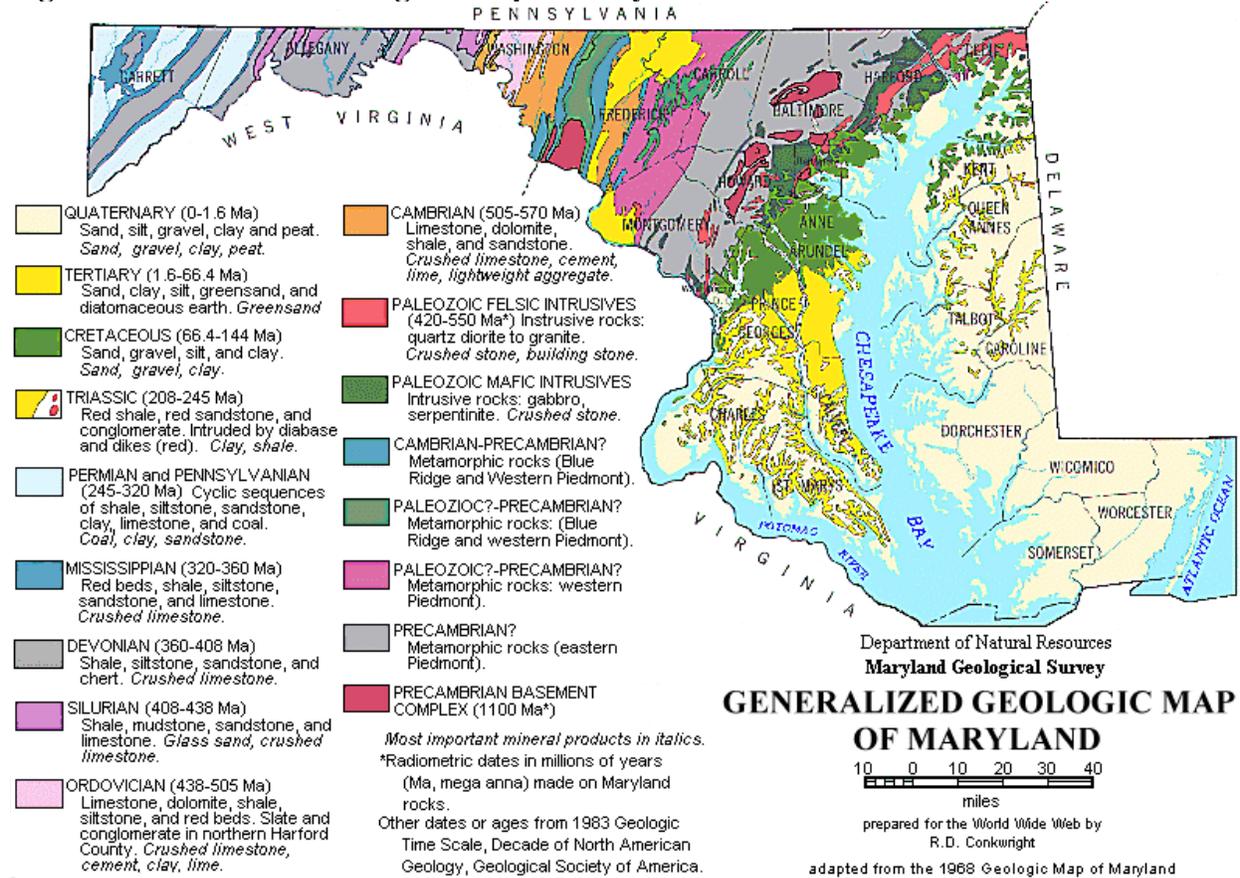

The Appalachian province extends from the Piedmont west through the remainder of the State. The Appalachian province is divided into three physiographically distinct divisions: the Blue Ridge district; the Hagerstown Valley and Alleghany Ridges; and the Alleghany Plateau.

The Blue Ridge district consists of the Catoctin and South mountains. The ridges in this district are formed on the early Paleozoic clastic deposits, of which the massive resistant Weverton sandstone or quartzite is the principal ridge-making element. The intervening Middletown Valley is floored over most of its area by metamorphosed volcanic rocks, both rhyolites and basalts. In the southern portion of the valley there are outcrops of older pre-Paleozoic gneiss.

The Hagerstown Valley district is a broad lowland with gently rolling floor underlain by a thick series of limestones of Cambrian and early Ordovician age, and Ordovician shales. The Alleghany Ridges are marked by a series of northeasterly trending ridges held up by massive sandstone and quartzite strata and intervening valleys that have eroded into weaker shale and limestone beds.

The strata in the Alleghany Plateau lie in broad folds. The surface of the plateau is greatly dissected and has a maximum amount of relief. Formations underlying the area range from Mississippian to pre-Cambrian.

2.2 Water Supply

The groundwater pathway assessment addresses hazardous substance migration to and within aquifers and potential threats to targets such as drinking water supplies. The target population is the human population directly (drinking) or indirectly (irrigation of commercial food crops or forage, watering livestock, food ingredient, supply for aquaculture or recreation) utilizing the affected aquifers. The TDL for groundwater is a four-mile radius around the site.

The majority of the population within a four-mile radius of dry cleaning facilities relies on municipal supplies, as dry cleaners are typically located in urban areas. However, individual domestic wells and private community wells provide the water supply to the majority of the rural and suburban populations that may be located within groundwater TDL.

The main discharge point for dry cleaners is the sewer line. The discharge from most dry cleaning units contains primarily water with dissolved phase chlorinated hydrocarbons, but also contains some liquid phase and some colloids containing chlorinated hydrocarbons. Being heavier than water, the chlorinated hydrocarbons settle to the bottom of the sewer line and exfiltrate through joints and cracks in the lines. Many of these chlorinated hydrocarbons have low vapor pressures and are volatile with a portion turning into a gaseous phase and penetrating the sewer line walls through the vadose zone in the soils and into the ground water.

2.3 Surface Water

The surface water pathway addresses hazardous substance migration to surface water bodies, drinking water supplies, the human food chain and sensitive environments. The target population consists of those people who use surface water for drinking water, consume food chain species from target fisheries, utilize the surface water for recreation and also includes environmental targets such as wildlife and wetlands. The TDL for the surface water pathway is 15 miles downstream from the probable point of entry into the surface water.

Twelve facilities were identified within two surface water TDL pathways potentially impacting surface water intakes. However, due to the likelihood for dilution of contamination reaching the surface water body, the surface water pathway is not expected to be impacted. The surface water pathway may be further evaluated during future environmental investigations.

2.4 Soils

The soils of the Coastal Plain are sandy or silty, very light to medium texture, and, except in low lying lands with high water table or where hard-pan has been developed, are well drained. They are usually acidic and require liming for most agricultural purposes.

The different formations of the Piedmont and Appalachian provinces give rise to different soil types, but some generalizations are possible. Residual soils developed on limestone terranes, notably in the Frederick and Hagerstown valleys, tend to be medium to heavy-textured, slightly acid and moderately permeable. Subsurface drainage is usually exceedingly good. Though these soils are derived from the solution of limestone and the concentration of the insoluble residues left after lime has been removed, they are acidic and are benefited by the addition of lime.

The residual soils developed on the acid schists, gneisses, phyllites and meta-basalts of the Piedmont tend to be medium textured, slightly to moderately acidic, moderately permeable, easily tilled, and of high natural fertility, containing considerable amounts of the rarer mineral plant food elements. On the slopes the soil tends to become rather shallow, gravelly to shaly, and subject to drought.

Soil pathway threats include those targets (physical and environmental) within a 200-foot radius of contaminated soils.

2.5 Meteorology

Maryland has a continental type of climate with well-defined seasons. It lies in a transition zone between a humid continental climate (with warm summers) to the north and west and a humid subtropical climate zone to the immediate south. Both zones influence the climate of Maryland. The microclimates in Maryland are influenced by location to abundant adjacent water bodies.

The average annual temperature in Maryland is 55.1 degrees Fahrenheit (°F), ranging from 48 to 59 °F and varying moderately with the seasons. The coldest part of the year falls in the months of January and February with a monthly average low temperature of 20 °F. There are on the average between 70 and 150 days having an average temperature below 32 °F. The warmest months of the year are July and August with an average high temperature of between 70 and 80 °F. Thirty days have an average temperature greater than 90 °F. There are on the average 209 days in the areas growing season.

Prevailing winds are from a westerly direction with a slight seasonal variation. Winds are from the northwest in the winter and from the southwest in the summer. Coastal storms may produce heavy rain in the warmer months and heavy snow in the colder months in addition to high winds and coastal flooding. Thunderstorms may become severe and produce heavy rains, high winds, and hail. Precipitation is evenly distributed throughout the year. Normal yearly precipitation ranges from 36 to 52 inches with an annual snowfall of 21.6 inches. July is the wettest month with 4.18 inches of precipitation, and April is the driest month with a normal precipitation of 3.06 inches.

The air pathway is typically a four mile radius from the site but may extend as far as an observed release can be established. Although air emissions at current facilities are regulated by MDE’s ARMA, volatilization from releases of liquid and/or dissolved phase solvents, the air pathway scenario will more likely be addressed in potential future pre-remedial investigation via characterization of the indoor air at each facility and possibly adjacent to these historic and current dry cleaning sites.

2.6 Nearby Land Use and Population Distribution

The TDL for the soil exposure pathway is 200 feet for resident population and one mile for the nearby population. The pathway for soil exposure accounts for the potential threat to people on or near the site who may come into contact with exposed materials and areas of suspect contamination. This includes both ingestion and dermal exposure.

The TDL for the air exposure pathway is a four-mile radius around a site divided into incremental distances. The air pathway accounts for hazardous substance migration, in gaseous or particulate form, through the air. Airborne deposition is a potential threat to people and sensitive environments. Target populations consist of people who reside, work or go to school within the TDL.

The 2000 Census documented 5,296,486 people living in the 23 Maryland counties and Baltimore City (Table 1).

3.0 WASTE DESCRIPTION

In the late 1920s or early 1930s, chlorinated hydrocarbon based nonflammable synthetic solvents were introduced into the United States which allowed dry cleaners to safely clean fabrics, preserve the color of the garment and restore the garment to a nearly new condition. These chlorinated hydrocarbon solvents include carbon tetrachloride, TCE, PCE, 1,1,2-trichloro-1,2,2,-trifluoroethane (Freon 113 or Valcene, a chlorofluorocarbon subject to the Montreal Protocols and no longer manufactured in the United States) and by the early 1980s, TCA. The Halogenated Solvent Industry Alliance 1987 white paper on PCE estimates that dry cleaners have used 56 percent of the all of the PCE used in the United States. These chlorinated hydrocarbons used as dry cleaning solvents, as well as some of their associated degradation products, are carcinogens that appear on EPA's TCL of regulated hazardous substances (Table 2).

The release of these TCL contaminants from dry cleaning facilities into the environment, primarily to groundwater, is well known and documented. As discussed in Section 2.2, there is the potential for multiple-phase transport into various media once they enter the environment.

4.0 PRE-REMEDIAL PRIORITIZATION

A Statewide list of historical dry cleaners in Maryland that operated during select time periods was generated through research of historic telephone directories for each County at the Enoch Pratt Central Library in Baltimore City. The names and addresses of historical dry cleaners were recorded and compiled from telephone directories from the time periods of around 1950 and 1970. These time periods were chosen based on completeness and availability of directories that represented each county in the State. Facilities and their addresses were recorded under the telephone directory sections or headings identified as: “Cleaners,” “Dry Cleaning Equipment Retailers,” “Cleaners and Dyers,” “Cleaners and Dyers Supplies,” “Commercial and Industrial Cleaners,” and “Carpet and Rug Cleaners.” A data gap does exist for Howard and Montgomery Counties during the time period of around 1970 as telephone directories were not available at the Enoch Pratt Central Library, the Montgomery County Historical Society or the Montgomery County Public Library. The telephone directories reviewed are shown in Table 3. A list of current dry cleaning facilities was generated from MDE’s ARMA list of permitted facilities database.

The compilation of the names and addresses of dry cleaning facilities and suppliers from the sources listed in Table 3 identified 894 facilities plus 30 suppliers operating in the era around the early 1950s and 457 facilities identified in the era around 1970. MDE's ARMA currently also lists 1,102 permitted facilities. The list of the facilities identified in this investigation appears in Appendix I. There are a number of facilities or addresses that appear in two or more eras reviewed. Some of the early era facilities could be residences where small household laundry and ironing operations took place. Additionally, some of the early operators in more rural areas of the State did not list their address. It must be noted that this investigation only captures a percentage of the dry cleaning operations that have existed within the State; many operations started up and closed between the eras reviewed. It must also be noted that many of these facilities may have only been used as a drop off and pick up establishment where only small quantities of hazardous chemicals were used, handled or stored, if at all.

To define the potential for release of dry cleaner chemicals into the environment, a systematic approach was used to develop a hierarchy of the facilities most likely to have the greatest impact on human health and the environment and subsequently, require further investigation. The facilities determined to have the highest priority for future investigation were identified by analyzing the list to determine the potential full time dry cleaning operations (those facilities that included “plant,” “on premises,” “30 minute,” “1 or one hour,” “2 hour,” “3 hour,” “7 hour,” or similar description in their name or advertisement) that have operated over an extended period of time in MDE designated WHPAs due to the potential to not only impact indoor air but also have a greater likelihood to impact a community water supply. These sites are designated as Level 1 Priority sites. A total of 21 sites in ten counties were identified as having the highest priority for future pre-remedial investigation and are shown in Appendix II.

The second level of priority for pre-remedial investigation involved those sites that have operated at the same location for greater than 50 years and facilities that advertised under “Dry Cleaning Equipment Retailers” or “Cleaners and Dyers Supplies” as these sites have a greater potential to impact human health and the environment due to the longevity of their operation and infrastructure (mainly sewer lines) or handling and storage of large volumes of dry cleaning solvents. A total of 63 facilities in eight counties were identified as Level 2 Priority facilities and are shown in Appendix II.

The third level of priority for pre-remedial investigation involved facilities that were identified to have been in operation for greater than 35 years but less than 50 years and those facilities that included “Carpet and/or Rug Cleaners” in their name. Rug and carpet cleaners that advertised “wall to wall cleaning”, “Von Shrader,” “Duraclean,” or “Servicemaster” methods were not listed as those methods utilized foam detergents rather than solvent-based cleaning agents used in commercial rug cleaning operations. A total of another 63 facilities in ten counties were designated as Level 3 Priority facilities and are shown in Appendix II.

The fourth level of prioritization identified full time high volume dry cleaning operations by listing those facilities that included “plant,” in the title or advertisement. These facilities were more likely to have used, handled or stored higher volumes of dry cleaning solvents. A total of 103 facilities in thirteen counties were designated as Level 4 Priority facilities and are shown in Appendix II.

The fifth level of ranking included those facilities that have operated for a period of at least fifteen years. A total of 56 facilities in fourteen counties were designated as Level 5 Priority facilities and are shown in Appendix II.

The sixth level of priority distinguished the full time dry cleaning facilities that most likely used, handled and stored a higher volume of dry cleaning solvents on site from the potential drop off and pickup locations that may have used smaller quantities of dry cleaner solvents on site, mainly for spot pretreatment. This level lists those facilities that included “on premises,” “30 minute,” “1 or one hour,” “2 hour,” “3 hour,” “7 hour,” or similar in their name or advertisement and were not included in the previous rank of sites. A total of 73 facilities in nine counties were designated as Level 6 Priority facilities and are shown in Appendix II.

The seventh level of priority describes those remaining facilities identified in the older telephone directories. These remaining sites are not distinguishable from the other sites in the hierarchy as full time dry cleaners that operated over an extended period of time. These remaining sites were in operation for less than 15 years and could not be readily identified as full time operations and therefore are considered a lesser priority for future pre-remedial investigations. There are 809 facilities identified in all twenty-three counties in Maryland designated as Level 7 Priority facilities and are listed in Appendix III.

The last level of priority in the hierarchy of ranking dry cleaning facilities for future pre-remedial investigations are those facilities not listed under previous priority levels and are operating under MDE ARMA permits. These are sites that are regulated for air emissions from the permitted dry cleaning machines but have not been assessed as to their potential to have released liquid and/or dissolved phase dry cleaning solvents into the environment. There were 687 facilities identified in eighteen counties designated as Level 7 Priority facilities. Those Level 7 Priority dry cleaning facilities operating under a MDE ARMA permit are shown in Appendix IV.

The hierarchy of ranking the dry cleaning facilities for future pre-remedial investigations is outlined in Table 4.

Table 4: Priority Levels for Future Investigation

Priority	Rationale	# of Facilities
Level 1	Facilities in operation >15 years in WHPA	21

5.0 CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Since the late 1920s or early 1930s, dry cleaning facilities in the United States have been utilizing chlorinated hydrocarbons in their processes. It is universally accepted that the handling, storage and use of these hazardous compounds over time has likely resulted in releases to the environment. Therefore, it is likely that at many of these facilities, releases of chlorinated solvents have occurred that have potentially impacted the soils and groundwater in the vicinity of those sites where releases have occurred. This investigation was conducted to evaluate dry cleaning facilities for future pre-remedial investigations to assess those potential releases.

The objectives of the historic dry cleaner site initiative are to:

- Identify historic dry cleaning sites State-wide;
- Define populations that may be at risk from releases of chlorinated solvents;
- Estimate users and uses of groundwater in close proximity to the sites; and
- Prioritize the historic and current dry cleaning sites to lay the groundwork for future investigations that will assess potential risks to human health and the environment.

Therefore, a hierarchy of seven priority levels was developed as a systematic way to evaluate the need for assessment of former and current dry cleaning operations. It must be noted that there are many more facilities that have operated during other periods of time not captured by this investigation. Even with the data gaps identified within this report a very high number of potentially contaminated sites have been compiled. Currently, MDE's ARMA maintains records on 1,102 cleaning facilities, which likely have permitted dry cleaning equipment (dry cleaning machines that utilize tetrachloroethene) associated with them. Although these facilities are monitored for volatile emission into the air, most of the facilities likely do not have an assessment of the impacts of released (accidental or otherwise) liquid and dissolved phase chlorinated solvents. MDE is recommending pre-remedial investigation of all of the sites listed within this investigation.
